Valley Eats Local

Why eat local? Locally grown food reduces the carbon footprint of transport and benefits the environment through maintaining farmland and open spaces. Local food is eaten seasonally so it's full of flavor and has more nutrients because it's fresher. Eating closer to home supports the local economy, generates fewer distribution steps to provide a safer food supply and local growers can tell us how the food was grown.